Return of The "Prince."

Probably no joint work of Frank Pixley and Gustav Luders has met with greater popular favor than "The Prince of Pilsen" a musical comedy which, after attaining phenomenal success in this country, was taken by Mr. Henry W. Savage to London, there to enjoy a long run at the Shaftesbury Theatre. The quaint sayings of Hans Wagner, the brewer, who, through no fault of his own, is accepted in Europe as a scion of a royal German house, have passed into colloquialisms wherever the English language is spoken, and one hears in daily conversation "Vas you efer in Zinzinnati?" "Dere'll be a scattering ofer der Rhine ven I gets back!" "Charge it to the Prince of Pilsen!" and many other well remembered phrases. The story of the opera is ingenious and well worked out, the situations are cleverly devised and effective the incidents diverting, the lines t rightly humorous, the characters well drawn and contrasted and the music delightfully catchy and memory haunting—in brief no light musical play ever more fairly won its success. It will be gratifying, therefore, to hosts of playgoers in Greater Boston to learn that "The Prince of Pilsen" is to return on Monday, May 29, to the Tremont Theatre on whose stage it had its original production, and where it has been performed no less than twenty-four weeks. From the three companies presenting "The Prince," Mr. Savage has selected a really "stellar" cast for the coming engagement.

Tremont Theatre

Famous Paintings

In the re-decoration of the Tremont Theatre, two famous paintings by Signor Cav. Enrico Risi have been placed on the walls of the foyer. That under the balcony at the rear of the foyer is entitled

NERO AT THE CIRCUS

It represents Nero, the Roman emperor, descending from his seat in the circus to admire more closely the splendid form of Lygia, the beautiful victim of his court's advisers. Lygia was a beautiful princess of the Ligurians, a people recently conquered, and Venetius wanted to marry her, contrary to the laws of that time. Nero was induced to condemn Lygia to death, by exposing her in the circus, tied to the horns of a raging bull, and Ursus, her slave, was compelled to fight the bull in the arena.

Ursus succeeded in killing the animal before much harm was done to his beautiful sovereign. Nero then granted their liberty, and, later, Venetius married Lygia.

ISABELLA ORSINA

The picture on the wall alongside the staircase leading to the first balcony, on the left of the foyer, represents Giordano Orsini, Duke of Bracciano, in his palace in Florence, calling his cousin Troilo to account for treacherous behavior during his absence. In the year 1600 the Duke, upon returning victorious from the battle of Lepanto, against the Turks, learned that Isabella, his wife, had become the victim of Troilo's passion. After a brief period of well simulated happiness the Duke strangled Isabella with a silken rope, then quietly dressed himself and called Troilo, from whom he obtained a full confession. After this the Duke, drawing the curtain, showed Troilo the corpse of Isabella, saying: "She is already punished; now it is your turn!" But Troilo fled, and took refuge in Spain, where he shortly afterwards came to a miserable end.
